Watch the news for the Jews. They are always in it.

Slave labourers in the Buchenwald concentration camp in Germany in April 1945. Around 240,000 people, mostly Jews, passed through the camp. About a quarter of them died of disease or starvation.

'The Destruction of the Temple in Jerusalem', painted by Nicolas Poussin in the 17th century.

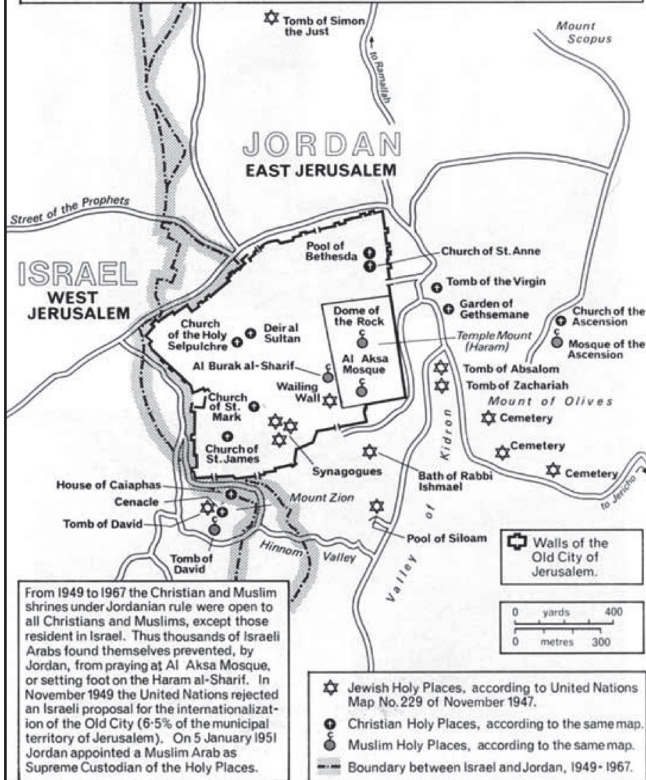

Exodus 1947 was a ship that carried Jewish refugees who wished to live in Israel. Most of them were Holocaust survivors who had no legal immigration certificates to Palestine. The British Royal Navy seized the ship, and deported all its passengers back to Europe. However, millions of Jews have since returned to their land.

DIVIDED JERUSALEM AND THE HOLY PLACES, 1949 - 1967

Under Article VIII of the Israel-Jordan Armistice Agreement of 3 April 1949, Israeli Jews were guaranteed free access to the Western (or Wailing) Wall, but not to the Mount of Olives cemetery, the Kidron valley tombs, or the tomb of Simon the Just. In fact, no Israeli Jews were allowed to visit even the Western Wall during the nineteen years of Jordanian rule, a motor road was built through the Mount of Olives cemetery, tombstones were used as building materials, the Tomb of Simon the Just used as a stable, and the synagogues of the Old City were demolished or desecrated.

From 1949 to 1967 the Christian and Muslim shrines under Jordanian rule were open to all Christians and Muslims, except those resident in Israel. Thus thousands of Israeli Arabs found themselves prevented, by Jordan, from praying at Al Aksa Mosque, or setting foot on the Haram al-Sharif. In November 1949 the United Nations rejected an Israeli proposal for the internationalization of the Old City (6.5% of the municipal territory of Jerusalem). On 5 January 1951 Jordan appointed a Muslim Arab as Supreme Custodian of the Holy Places.

Jerusalem was in the hands of other countries from AD 70 until 1967. Map ©Martin Gilbert, 1977
